Transformational Leadership Programme: Good communication in international contexts

(English skills at B2 level are required)

Online Workshop on November 12, 2025, from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. via Zoom.

Description of the Workshop:

Clear and effective communication is essential for successful collaboration - especially in today's diverse educational environments. This interactive workshop focuses on developing key communication skills and building a strong feedback culture among staff, peers, and teams. Participants will explore how to adapt their communication style to different contexts and individuals. Through practical exercises, we'll learn how members of effective teams communicate: with clarity, empathy, and mutual respect. Another central part of the workshop is learning how to give and receive feedback constructively. Whether you're offering guidance to a colleague or receiving input on your own work, feedback is a powerful tool for growth and connection. While cultural differences may influence communication, the workshop emphasizes strategies that help overcome misunderstandings and foster collaboration regardless of background. By reflecting on your own communication habits and engaging with others, you'll gain confidence in navigating challenging conversations and speaking effectively in group settings.

Workshop format:

This workshop will take place online and although we will provide short chunks of necessary theory, the bulk of this session is all about “learning by doing”. Expect lots of interaction, individual and group exercises, time for self-reflection, and rich discussions.

Suzanne Whitby will guide you through the workshop.

Suzanne is a communication specialist with over 20 years of international experience. She is the founder of communication training and coaching company, SciComm Success, where she works with scientists, researchers and research and education organizations to help them communicate complex messages to diverse audiences.
